You will be shown three statements, presented one at a time, describing an event or person. Each new statement will provide additional information about the event or person that is being described. Below the statements, you will also see four interpretations about the event or person being described in the statement(s). Each interpretation has its own scale (from 0 - 100%), where you will be asked to rate the likelihood of each interpretation given the information described in the statement(s). Rate how well you believe each interpretation relates to the event or person described in the statement(s).

It is important to rate each of the four interpretations independently from one another. Do not compare the interpretations to each other. The total of the interpretations should not necessarily equal 100%.

Story task

(Example)

Danielle is very unreliable.

As each new statement is shown, reconsider the ratings you have assigned to each interpretation. Ratings for each interpretation can be changed as much or as little as you like, or can be kept the same if you feel that they have not changed with the addition of a new statement. It is possible that none or many of the interpretations will be a good fit for the statements.

You will be using the mouse or touchpad to make your ratings. Click on 'Next' to display the next statement. After you have seen all three statements, click 'Done' to move to the next trial. You will now complete 2 practice trials before beginning the experiment.
